

The webinars will be run by two very special guests:

- Helen Sharman CMG OBE, first British Astronaut and UK Outreach Ambassador
- Jim Al-Khalili OBE FRS, physicist, author and broadcaster and one of the best-known science communicators in Britain

Has “following the science” ever been as important as it is today?

Since the start of the pandemic, international collaboration in research and innovation has greatly intensified. The global scientific community has come together and developed promising tests and treatments for COVID-19 in as little as a few months. We’re seeing more scientists across different media than we have ever seen in the past. Has the role of science been strengthened and will it continue post-Covid? Join us for a conversation with the first British astronaut, Helen Sharman, and the award-winning science communicator, Jim Al-Khalili.
