

Is studying abroad a thing of the past?

Many universities are concerned about the student enrolment this autumn, including some UK universities with regard to international students. While the virus is still out there and the various travel restrictions in place, many significant questions arise. Will students still want to study abroad? Domestically, will students be able to move to attend universities in other parts of the country? What is the future of student mobility? Join us in this session as we explore how the current Covid-19 crisis will affect the demand for student mobility in the long term.

Speakers:

- Prof. Simon Marginson, Professor of Higher Education, University of Oxford
- Alan Mackay, Deputy Vice-Principal International and Director, Edinburgh Global, University of Edinburgh
- Komiljon Karimov, Rector, Westminster International University in Tashkent (WIUT)
- Janet Ilieva, Director of Education Insight
- Moderator Matt Durnin, Global Head of Insights and Consultancy, British Council